The Historic Church of St. John The Evangelist was originally built to serve the needs of Mt. Hood area residents, tourists, vacationers, and skiers from all over the State of Oregon and visitors from other states. Dedicated on September 26, 1937, the current building replaced the original St. Johns' which collapsed under snow weight on February 16, 1937. The structure is rustic style, constructed of peeled logs, and designed and built by Henry Steiner, a prominent area craftsman. It is one of the last log structures in the entire area to retain its' original design integrity with no basic alterations. Currently it is being used as a private residence.
