It is believed that this rock art was created in conjunction with a hunting ritual, before or after the hunt. There is no known way of determining the age of the art; however, it is assumed that it was done by early American man within the last 10,000 years. This art is an example of the many petroglyph sites that are scattered throughout the Northern Great Basin along major game migration routes and near occupation sites. Altogether the petroglyph sites may give information on the subsistance patterns of early man within the Great Basin.
